SCENIC APPOMATTOX RIVER COMMITTEE
the Commission of Outdoor Recreation's "New Approach to Scenic Rivers" program.
Under this concept, much of the field work, as well as the information gathering task, is done by a local citizens' group using guidelines set by the Commission. COR supervises and assists in the study whenever needed, and ultimately decides whether to recommend a waterway for scenic river designation to the Governor and members of the General Assembly.
Currently, there are two components of the Virginia Scenic River System. A 27.5 mile segment of Goose Creek in Loudoun County became a member of the system on July 1 of this year and a 26-mile stretch of the Rivanna River in Fluvanna County was designated a State Scenic River a year ago. .
In order to qualify for State designation a waterway must possess great natural and pastoral beauty and be a resource deemed worthy of protection based on the following six quality factors: canoeing, fishing, notable natural (Scenic, ecological, geological) features, notable historical and archaeological features, water quality, and natural condition of the banks and shoreland.

Film For Parents To Be Televised
RICHMOND - "Young Children with Special Needs," a film course designed primarily for parents, will be aired on WCVE-TV (Channel 23) beginning in September.
The 15-segment color film, developed by Virginia Commonwealth University in cooperation with the Virginia Association for Retarded Citizens, the Developmental Disabilities Advisory Council, and Central Virginia Television Corporation, offers viewers help in working with developmentally disabled children, from birth to five years of age.
The series will begin Tues., Sept. 7, over Channel 23, and will be aired twice, once at 3:30 p.m. and again in the evening at 7:30 p.m. The programs will be shown in the same time slots every Tuesday and Wednesday for the following 14 weeks.
The film segments, each one half hour in length, will answer four central questions: What groups of children are considered to have developmental disabilities? What services and facilities are available for these children? What are the developmental possibilities of such children? What constitutes education for them?
One of the major threads of thought in the series is that parents or parent substitutes are the child's first teachers and their continuing role as teacher is unique. The series shows that as the child develops, his educational needs change, involving a wide range of services concerned with health care, motor skills, and personal adequacy. The film course gives parents specific advice on where they can find the services needed to aid in their child's development and also illustrates the appropriate instructional materials needed to stimulate the child's learning.
The introductory segment of the televised film series deals with identification of young children with developmental disabilities and points out the need for early identification. Also included in this first segment is an explanation of Virginia's mandated legislation and implementation of the state plan regarding the disabled.
Middle segments of the film course focus on motor skills, language and self-help skills, sensory impairments, and social and emotional development.
